FIVE DAYS AFTER DISAPPEARANCE, JETLINER'S FATE STILL A MYSTERY

Chicago Tribune

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia Malaysia's military has traced what could have been the jetliner missing for almost five days to an area south of the Thai holiday island of Phuket, hundreds of miles to the west of its last known position, the country's air force chief said Wednesday.

His statement followed a series of conflicting accounts of the flight path of the Boeing 777-200ER with 239 people on board, which left authorities uncertain even which ocean to search in for Malaysia Airlines Flight MH370.

The last definitive sighting of the aircraft on civilian radar screens came shortly before 1:30 a.m. Saturday, less than an hour after taking off from Kuala Lumpur, as it flew northeast across the mouth of the Gulf of Thailand bound for Beijing.

What happened next remains one of the most baffling mysteries in modern aviation history, and the differing accounts put out by various Malaysian officials have drawn criticism of their handling of the crisis.

A Vietnam Air Force officer uses a map on an iPad showing the path of the Vietnam Air Force search and rescue AN-26 aircraft that he is travelling on.

In the latest potential lead, a Chinese government agency website on Wednesday said a Chinese satellite had photographed three "suspicious floating objects" on Sunday in waters northeast of Kuala Lumpur and south of Vietnam.

It said the images were taken over the "suspected accident area at sea" that was not far from where the plane made its last known

A woman writes a message of support and hope for the passengers on a banner at Kuala Lumpur International Airport on Wednesday.

ABOUT THE PLANE

The Boeing 777 has one of the best safety records of any commercial aircraft in service. Its only previous fatal crash came on July 6 last year when Asiana Airlines Flight 214 struck a seawall with its undercarriage on landing in San Francisco, killing three people.

One senior U.S. defense official said U.S. satellites had not located any sign of a crash.

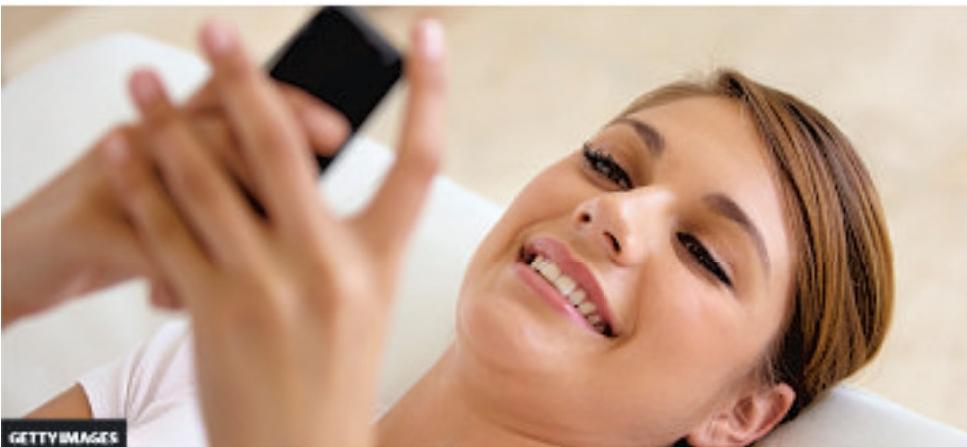

Earlier Wednesday, Rodzali Daud, the Malaysian air force chief, told a news conference that an aircraft was plotted on military radar at 2:15 a.m., 200 miles northwest of Penang Island off Malaysia's west coast.

But there has been no confirmation that the unidentified plane was Flight MH370, he said.

communication with air traffic control.

China's civil aviation chief said Thursday that there was no proof that floating objects were connected to the missing aircraft.

"Chinese satellites have found smoke and floating objects. ... At present we cannot confirm this is related to the missing aircraft," Li Jiaxiang told reporters on the sidelines of China's annual meeting of parliament.

With love, from an app

Zach Stafford
redeye@tribune.com
@zachstafford

Over the past few years, an explosion of smartphone apps have arguably made our lives a tad easier. They help us get a cheaper cab, make it seem totally normal to photograph all your meals and even monitor how well you are performing in the bedroom.

Apps seem to be our new best friends, our secretaries and even our own personal chefs. But could one eventually become your significant other ... or at least make him or her better?

That is what the newest app on the block, BroApp, is trying to do.

On the surface, BroApp looks like the saving grace for any boyfriend who has issues communicating with his significant other throughout the day.

The app allows a bro to preprogram text messages to send to his girlfriend at different times of the day, ensuring the bro-user always looks like a considerate and communicative partner.

Sounds smart, but does it actually work? According to one of the co-founders it does. "We created a demo BroApp (we didn't even have a name for it at the time!), just for our use, that sent a single daily check-in message," he told the "Today" show. "And was very well-received by our girlfriends. ... We used it successfully for three months as a trial and our partners had no idea."

Translation: For three months their girlfriends were dating an app, not just their boyfriends.

At first I was appalled. What makes romantic relationships so special is that you have a person, or persons, willing to take time out of their day just for you—even if it is just via text. So if you need BroApp, or something similar, I'd say you probably don't need a partner.

But then I thought some more about it.

We have become a society that likes human interaction less and less. According to a Time Inc. study, more than half of all Americans prefer digital communication to talking in person.

Even our dating has become more and more technology-focused over the years—more than a third of marriages are between people who met via a dating website.

In 2012, Pew Research Internet Project published data finding that teens text more than 100 times a day, and just a few years prior, the Kaiser Foundation found that people 8-18 years old spend more than 7.5 hours a day on a form of media.

Due to our phone-obsessed society, the development of something like BroApp should not be surprising; hell, I am surprised it took this long.

We should look at BroApp, and other apps like it, as just another app—like Uber or Yelp—that helps our days become a little more efficient.

If anything, our annoyance or immediate dislike of something like BroApp may just show us how deep we have fallen into this digital technology rabbit hole.

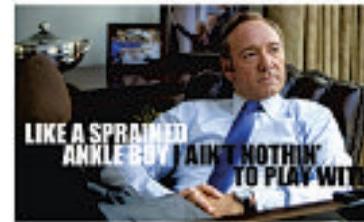

If a text message is your only evidence of whether your partner is good, maybe it's time you put down the phone and spend some one-on-one time with someone not named iPhone.

Freeze killing waterfowl

Lack of open water on lake leads to starvation

Chicago Tribune

Field Museum research assistant Josh Engel has spent a couple of days this week along the lakefront performing the grim task of collecting dead waterfowl.

They haven't been difficult to find.

Engel and his Field Museum colleagues collected 30 of the birds that had died close to shore, most of them red-breasted merganser and white-winged scoter ducks. Some were floating and others were sealed in ice; all were emaciated.

"It's sort of hard to go out and see—you can practically see them dying," said Engel, who also is an ornithologist.

Tens of thousands of diving ducks and other waterfowl spend their winters in the southwest part of Lake Michigan each year, said Douglas Stotz, conservation ecologist and ornithologist at the Field Museum. Most years, they fly from places like Canada and Alaska and spend their time here diving for mollusks and fish without major problems. But then came Chicago's frigid winter, which as recently as last weekend had blanketed about 93 percent of Lake Michigan in ice.

Hundreds of waterfowl likely have died as a result, experts say, many more are near starvation, and a winter storm—the likes of which Chicago experienced Tuesday night and Wednesday morning—could put even more at risk.

"They're built to survive and they do survive," Bob Fisher, president of the Illinois Ornithological Society, said of the affected birds, which also include loons and grebes. "Under normal conditions, they can handle it, but this year ... there just isn't enough access to open water."

Elsewhere in the Midwest, illness is another factor being considered. A sudden onset of disease caused by ducks' close quarters in open water is a possibility, Wisconsin wildlife officials recently told the Milwaukee Journal-Sentinel.

Whatever the cause or causes, Illinois birding experts and enthusiasts say they haven't seen Lake Michigan waterfowl starvation on the scale that they've seen this season, especially in the past few weeks. And they aren't the only ones who have noticed.

The problem has shocked recent visitors at sites such as Montrose Point, said Engel, where some people have gone so far as to throw fish out to birds that are still alive.

Winter piles on CTA budget

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

Snow has taken a toll on the CTA's budget.

In January, the agency used nearly three times as many sleet scrapers, more than three times the amount of de-icing fluid, three times the number of replacement heaters for buses and four times the amount of salt than January 2013, a top CTA official told CTA board members Wednesday at a monthly meeting.

The CTA's total expenses for January were $123 million, up $1.7 million compared with January 2013. Officials blamed snow removal for the increase. Labor and material expenses were up versus the same period last year.

Chicago has seen its third-snowiest winter so far, as of Wednesday. At 33.7 inches, January was the third-snowiest month in Chicago since 1884, when records began, the Tribune reported.

CTA Chief Financial Officer Ron DeNard said CTA staff has been monitoring expenses through February and March but is not concerned the CTA will plow through its budget.

SURVIVOR

When I was diagnosed with cancer, my life was profoundly changed in just one moment. But I decided to fight with the tenacity in which I wanted to live.

I run because I can, because I should, because I must.
I run because it helps me overcome my fear.
I run because others cannot.
I run because it reminds me that I am alive.

CHICAGO VIOLENCE

ONE CITY
UNDER THE GUN

Two people in their 30s were shot to death in separate incidents in Chicago in the last week, a RedEye analysis of preliminary police data found.

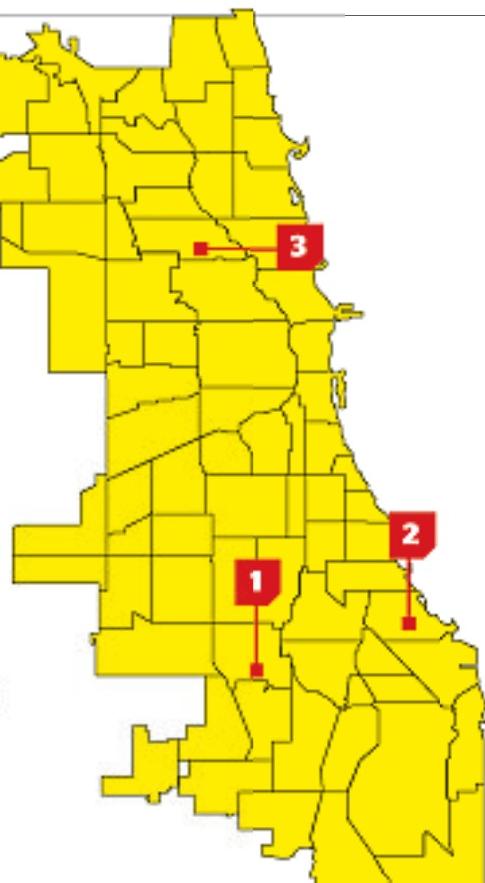

In South Shore, a 36-year-old man was fatally shot Monday in the 2300 block of East 75th Street, police said. Five days earlier, a 39-year-old woman was shot to death in the 8800 block of South May Street in Auburn Gresham, according to officials.

People in their 30s comprise 23 percent of the 52 homicide victims this year, as of Wednesday afternoon. These victims comprised 21 percent of the 435 homicide victims in 2013, RedEye determined.

Meanwhile, a 19-year-old man was fatally shot Tuesday in the 1900 block of North

Law school dean picked in hunt for Burge victims

Chicago Tribune

The presiding judge of the Cook County criminal division on Wednesday appointed the dean of Loyola University Chicago School of Law to identify any alleged torture victims of disgraced former Chicago police Cmdr. Jon Burge who are still in prison.

Judge Paul Biebel said he will appoint lawyers for any inmates identified by dean David Yellen.

Biebel's ruling came in response to a novel class-action petition filed by attorneys seeking immediate evidentiary hearings for more than a dozen men still imprisoned despite their allegedly credible claims that they were tortured into confessing by Burge or detectives under him.

Biebel denied the request to hear the matter as a class-action but effectively gave the attorneys what they were after when he appointed Yellen as "special master"—a position that functions essentially as an assistant to Biebel to identify valid claims and one that is commonly used in class-action lawsuits.

Attorneys from the MacArthur Justice Center at Northwestern University's law school and the People's Law Office said they were "profoundly gratified" by Biebel's ruling but said the step was "long overdue."

"This is a great moment in the history of Cook County," said Locke Bowman, MacArthur Center's director. "It is the moment when we started to get to the end of the Burge scandal."

House passes bill aimed at 'imperial presidency'

1 WASHINGTON The House passed the first of a pair of bills aimed at reining in what Republicans call a pattern of overreach by the executive branch under President Obama.

Democrats decried the base-pleasing measure as a political stunt. Immigration reform advocates said it threatens the administration's deferred action deportation program.

The legislation is a response to what Republicans say has been an "imperial presidency" under Obama. His new push to work around Congress using his "pen and phone" strategy only reinforces the need to, as House Judiciary Committee Chairman Bob Goodlatte (R-Va.) said, "restore balance to our system of government."

Approved Wednesday in a party-line vote, the so-called ENFORCE the Law Act would give either the House or Senate standing in court to challenge any administration move to adopt a formal or informal policy not to enforce laws passed by Congress.

3 dead in building collapse

2 NEW YORK CITY Two New York City buildings collapsed Wednesday in an explosion believed to be caused by a gas leak, killing three people, injuring at least 36, and setting off a search for more victims feared trapped in the rubble, officials said.

The blast, which scattered debris across nearby rooftops, brought down the neighboring five-story buildings, with a total of 15 apartments, at about 9:30 a.m. on a largely residential Upper Manhattan block.

Clouds of thick smoke billowed from the rubble of the apartment buildings that sat above a ground-level church and a piano store in a largely Latino working-class neighborhood. Officials declined to give a number of people still missing.

Mayor Bill de Blasio, who rushed to the scene in East Harlem, where a cascade of twisted and burnt metal blocked the sidewalk and covered parked cars, said preliminary information showed the explosion was caused by a gas leak.

Officials at the press conference said the blast occurred 15 minutes after a resident in an adjacent building called Con Edison to complain of a gas odor.

Edward Foppiano, Con Ed's vice president for gas operations, said that while the utility could not say for certain what caused the explosion, it was treating the incident as a gas leak issue. The utility most recently responded to customer complaint about a gas odor in the area last May, but the issue had been resolved, Foppiano said.

The National Transportation Safety Board

Firefighters work at the site of a building explosion and collapse on Wednesday. REUTERS said it was investigating the "gas explosion and subsequent fire."

Metro-North Railroad, which had shut down train traffic moving through Manhattan while it cleared debris from the tracks announced late afternoon it had restored all commuter train traffic passing through the area.

Hundreds of firefighters were scouring the mounds of debris for survivors and trapped bodies. Two women were killed and the body of another person was found in the rubble late in the day, raising the death toll to three, a police spokesman said.

De Blasio said there were "a number" of people missing.

"This is a tragedy because there was no time to warn people ahead of time," de Blasio said. "We are expending every effort to locate each and every loved one."

Of those injured, one was in critical condition and most suffered cuts, broken bones and smoke inhalation, authorities said.

At least three children were among the injured. Two of them were treated for minor injuries and released, while a third is in critical condition, hospital officials told a news conference.

EU agrees to sanctions on Russia

3 The EU agreed on a framework Wednesday for its first sanctions on Russia since the Cold War, a stronger response to the Ukraine crisis than many expected and a mark of solidarity with Washington in the drive to make Moscow pay for seizing Crimea.

N.J. moms can bar dads from delivery room

4 Now Jersey this week became the first U.S. state to allow pregnant women to bar the fathers of their children from the delivery room while giving birth, under a court ruling. Mothers-to-be are also not obligated to inform fathers they have gone into labor, according to the decision published Monday.

Report: Border security tech may be a waste

5 A high-tech effort to boost border security has no evaluation system so the money may be wasted on cameras and sensors that don't help Border Patrol agents, according to a report released Wednesday by the Government Accountability Office, the investigative arm of Congress.

Web founder calls for online bill of rights

The inventor of the world wide Web, Tim Berners-Lee, called on Wednesday for a bill of rights to protect freedom of speech on the Internet and users' rights after leaks about government surveillance of online activity.

Bardo

By Chris Sosa | FOR REDEYE

If you've been losing sleep trying to project the outcome of the Big Ten men's basketball tournament, don't worry—it's probably not just you.

"I think it's going to be the most unpredictable Big Ten conference tournament in the history of the tournament," Big Ten Network analyst Stephen Bardo said.

How unpredictable? So much so that even a team that finished 6-12 in conference play can't be counted out.

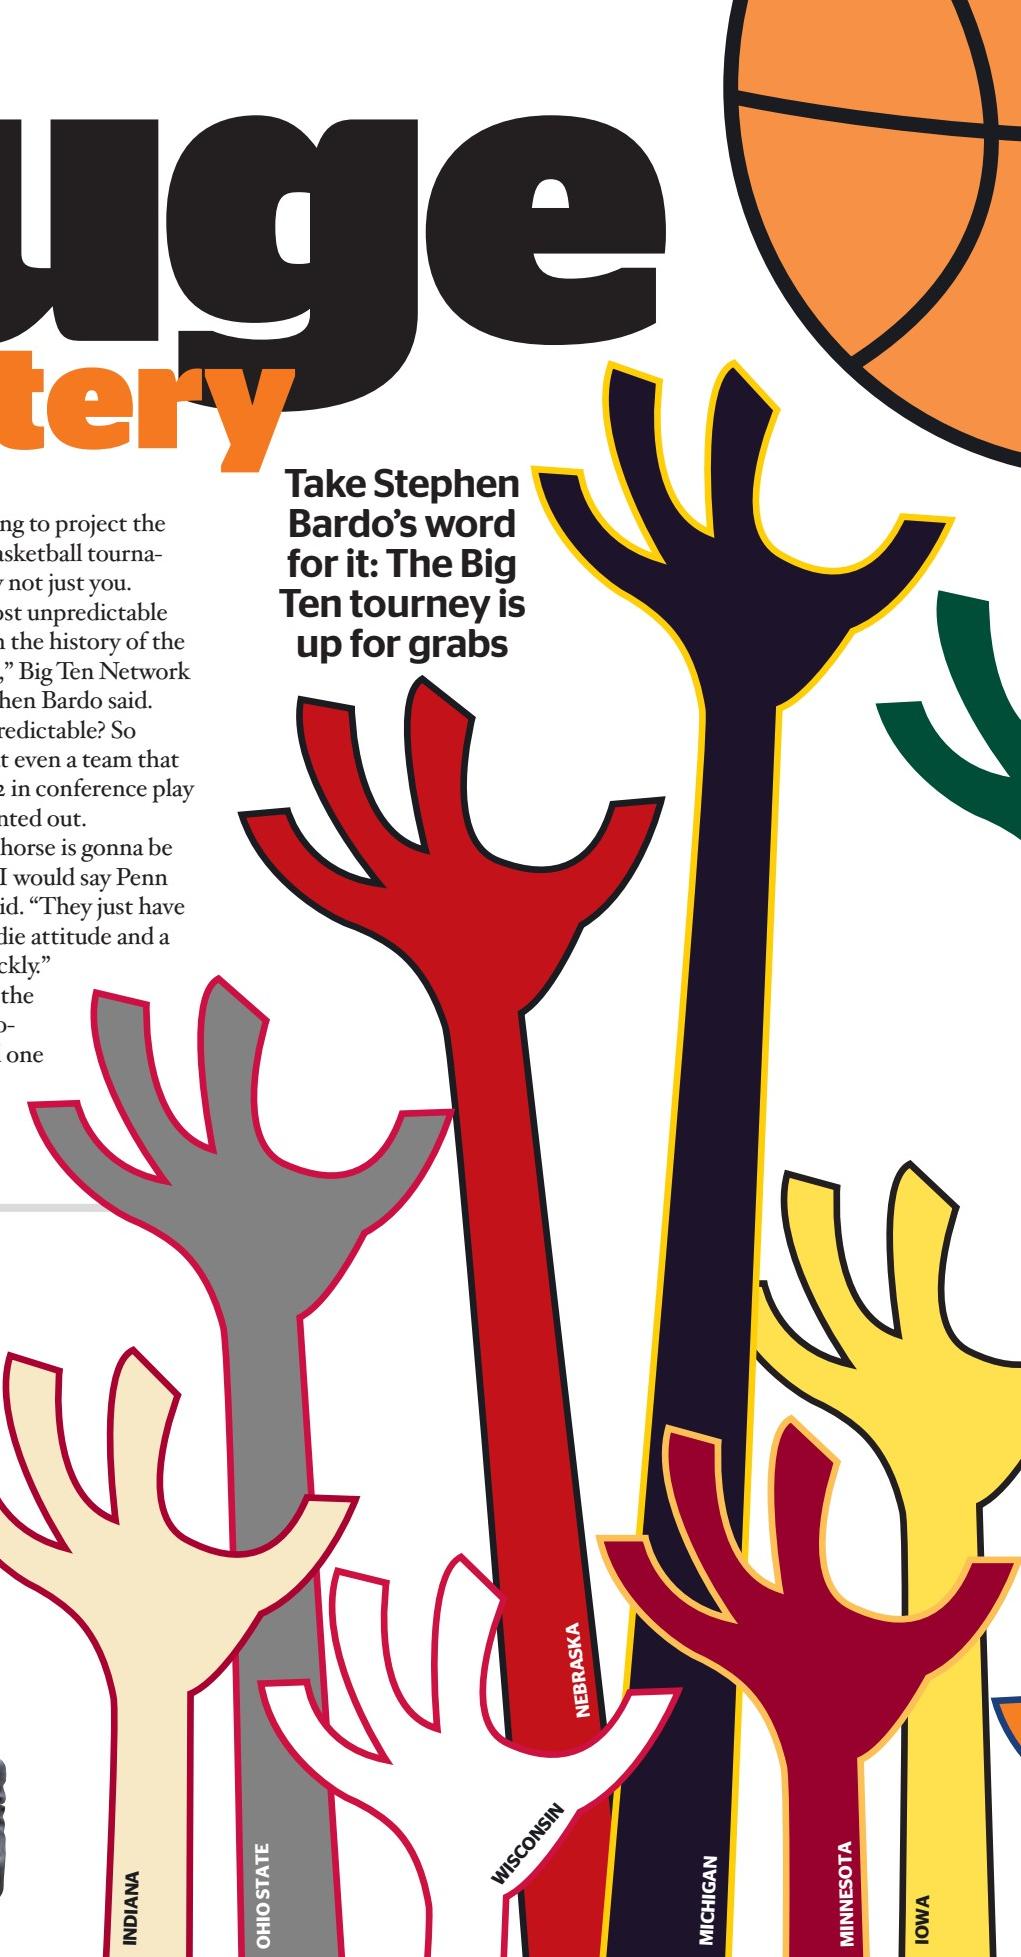

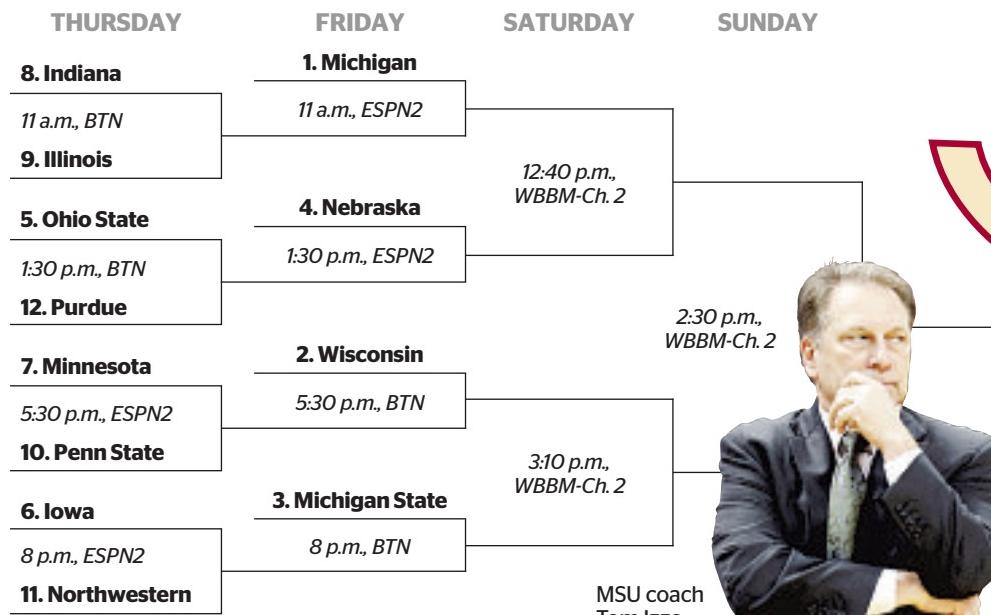

"My dark horse is gonna be interesting: I would say Penn State," he said. "They just have a never-say-die attitude and a team that can bounce back very quickly."

We asked Bardo for three things: the odds of each team winning, their momentum coming in (scale of 1-5) and one reason to watch each team.

These teams are barely hanging on

Chicago Tribune

Gonzaga took care of business in Tuesday's West Coast Conference tournament, putting to rest worries that the Bulldogs would be a rare NCAA tournament no-show.

With the victory, they may have bumped out another bubble team.

Selection Sunday arrives in a few days. Here are the teams that need to make the most of the time they have left:

BYU (23-12, RPI 31): The Cougars probably needed to beat Gonzaga on Tuesday but got taken down 75-64 for the West Coast title. Their resume has blemishes with four losses to teams outside the top-100 RPI.

Prediction: Out

Dayton (22-9, RPI 39): With three losses to teams outside the top-100 RPI, the Flyers are in trouble. Then again, they own wins against top-50 teams St. Louis, Massachusetts, George Washington and Gonzaga.

Prediction: In

Missouri (21-10, RPI 50): The Tigers own only two victories against top-50 RPI programs, including one against fellow bubble contender Tennessee. Losses at Alabama and at Vanderbilt will hurt.

Prediction: Out

Nebraska (19-11, RPI 42): The Cornhuskers don't have as many victories as some other bubble teams, but they beat Ohio State, Michigan State on the road and Wisconsin. They're also hot at the right time, entering the Big Ten tournament with eight wins in the past nine games.

Prediction: In

McCown's kind of town ... is now Tampa Bay

Chicago Tribune

Free-agent quarterback Josh McCown agreed to terms Wednesday with Tampa Bay on a two-year contract.

Sources said the deal is worth $10 million, with a maximum value of $15 million.

McCown rejoins former Bears coach Lovie Smith in Tampa Bay, where he'll have the opportunity to start.

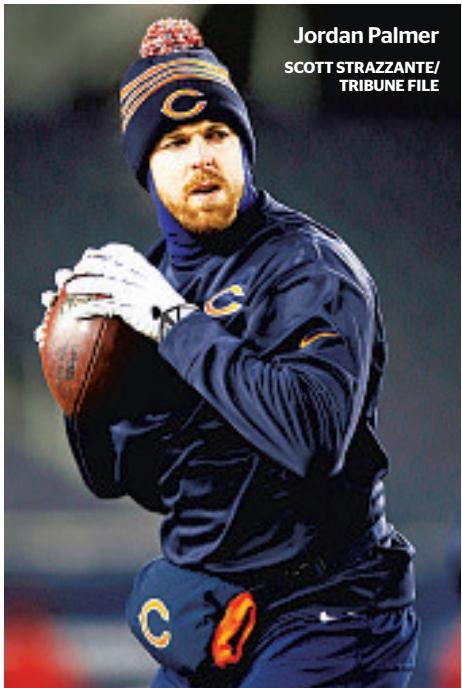

"We all want to congratulate Josh," Bears general manager Phil Emery said. "We're very proud for him."

The agreement leaves veteran Jordan Palmer as Jay Cutler's backup. Palmer has played in four career games, none since 2010.

"We like Jordan Palmer," Emery said. "He's a guy that fit in incredibly quick. He fit in in the [quarterbacks meeting] room and has a strong arm."

Emery added: "We're going to look at the draft for an opportunity to add to our quarterback roster," and said one also could be acquired later via free agency.

McCown threw 13 touchdowns and only one interception in eight games last season. He started five in place of the injured Cutler.

Paralympian rules all seasons

Tatyana McFadden has done it again.

The University of Illinois graduate joined the group of athletes who have won medals in winter and summer Paralympic competition when she took silver in Wednesday's sit ski sprint at the 2014 Winter Paralympics in Sochi, Russia.

"I can't even believe it. My main goal was just to come in and make it to the final," McFadden said in a statement from the U.S. Paralympic team. "I am just so happy and so proud."

McFadden, 24, finished one-tenth of a second behind winner Mariann Marthinsen of Norway in the 1-kilometer race. A three-time track gold medalist at the 2012 summer Paralympics, McFadden took up skiing barely one year ago.

WES' WORLD

CHECKING IN TO THE ODD 'GRAND BUDAPEST HOTEL'

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

When a building is deserving of an entire movie poster, one can pretty much assume two things. One, the building itself has plenty of character. And two, it's full of a bunch of really weird characters. Such is the case with "The Grand Budapest Hotel," the latest trip into the Willy Wonka factory that is director Wes Anderson's mind, opening Friday. Every floor is packed with kooky folks just waiting to share their stories. Here's whom you'll find. DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYE_DANA

Tilda Swinton makes the most of her time in 'Grand Budapest'

By Matt Pals | REDEYE

To play the very old Madame D., whose death and will drive the plot of Wes Anderson's extraordinary "The Grand Budapest Hotel," Tilda Swinton endured five hours in the makeup chair to put on her appearance and five hours to take it off.

"I only did it for two days," said the Oscar-winning actress ("Michael Clayton"), 53, by phone from SXSW in Austin, Texas. "So it was not like Jim Carrey in 'The Grinch' or any of that kind of stuff."

How did you occupy yourself in the makeup chair?

It was fascinating watching the way these guys work. I had a whole team taking these bits of what looked like bacon and putting them on my face and arms and earlobes. It's fascinating.

I'm such a nerd about that kind of stuff. I really, really loved it.

Is it a compliment to say I totally believed you were an old woman?
It's the most romantic thing that you could say to me. Thank you very, very, very much.

After "Moonrise Kingdom," this is the second consecutive small-but-significant role you've done for Wes Anderson.

What does he bring out of you?

Oh, it's like going to the best fancy dress party in the world, and you get your costume provided for you. And in this case, half a butcher shop of meat to stick on my face. It was just a hilarious and wonderful group of people. It would be hard to resist any party that Wes Anderson threw as far as I'm concerned.

Is there an untold story you can tell me about the filming of "Grand Budapest"?

An untold true story, or should I make one up?

That's up to you.

[Laughs.] I don't know; I don't know what's told and what's not told. What can I tell you? It's a beautiful film. It's Wes Anderson at the top of his game. Most of the cast came in and out. It was like holiday camp with people coming in and out, almost sleeping in each other's beds, one night after the next, ships in the night. It was great. And we all went to see the film, and it was better than all of us could imagine.

'The Grand Budapest Hotel'

It's all in the details

FAST PAISED*Matt Pais» mpais@tribune.com » @mattpais

hypothetical foundation of legacy.

There are so many elaborate plot details and rich, perfectly cast characters that the rest of this review could be spent listing and explaining. To try and condense: In 1968 in the fictional former republic of Zubrowka, an author (Jude Law) listens to Zero (F. Murray Abraham) recount the complicated manner in which he became the owner of the once-heralded, now-declining Grand Budapest Hotel. This flashes back to 1932, when Zero (played as a young man by newcomer Tony Revolorio) works as a lobby boy under the tutelage of "liberally perfumed" concierge extraordinaire Gustave (Ralph Fiennes/Voldemort, in a rare comedic role). This man is a paragon of hospitality and class—other than his nihilistic note that life is so fast as to be pointless, and his fondness for sleeping with his wealthy, aged guests.

!!! The Grand Budapest Hotel R

"She was dynamite in the sack, by the way," he says after Madame D. (Tilda Swinton) passes away. With her fortune, including a valuable painting, up for grabs, the story opens up to involve Madame's conniving son (Adrien Brody) and a violent henchman who could be properly played by none other than Willem Dafoe.

At last, Anderson (who directed and wrote the script, inspired by the work of Austrian author Stefan Zweig, from a story conceived with Hugo Guinness) challenges himself to expand his universe. It's pure delight to get lost in this world. The result is 2014's second viewing experience (after "The Lego Movie") that delivers so much creativity you want to take a selfie of your grin and look at it the next time you see something lousy.

If you've ever seen an Anderson film ("Rushmore," "Moonrise Kingdom"), you know the man is meticulous in his visual constructions and comedic timing. Collecting so many lonely and joyous peculiarities of human behavior, "Hotel" is as lovely and layered as the baked goods prepared by Zero's love, Agatha (Saoirse Ronan). Throughout, Anderson shows the value of a filmmaker working at the full, precise capacity of a master chef. "The Grand Budapest Hotel" is the movie that earns him his third Michelin star.

EXPERIENCE THE GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD LIKE NEVER BEFORE.

Chicago Tribune

Wes Anderson came to Chicago at the beginning of the month to promote his new film, "The Grand Budapest Hotel." He arrived by train. Now, you might assume his mode of transportation was about drawing attention to a new movie—pure whistle-stop promotion. And yet Chicago was his only stop: Anderson just prefers traveling by rail.

Still, doesn't that sound exactly like a Wes Anderson film?

After a packed recent screening of "Budapest" at the Music Box Theatre, Anderson stepped backstage, surrounded by assistants, publicists, crew, critics. He walked through an opposite door and into a snowfall. Having reached the unmarked lounge the Music Box keeps in an adjacent building, Anderson dropped onto a couch.

Like any filmmaker, any artist, you show certain tics, return to certain themes ...

I do, I do.

Only for you, that seems doubly true. For one, the passing of a time and a place, the decline of a group of people appears to be a unifying thread in many of your movies.

A lot of that stuff, I try not to think about that. I don't want to think about it, to be honest. I would like to keep themes, motifs, whatever, abstract. I work on the characters and the experience of the film itself, but I never set out to document a world before it's gone or anything like that. ... The reason I make a movie set in a certain time and place has more to do with whatever I am interested in at that moment, and I am drawn to old things. I like what time can do to people, to buildings and to art.

But even "Moonrise Kingdom," which you shot in Rhode Island. I grew up there. It doesn't capture the place, as it is, so much as the way I like to remember seaside towns when I was younger, a time I can't return to. "Jaws" does that, too.

You know, when we made "Moonrise Kingdom," I was always thinking about Spielberg and "Jaws." Because "Jaws" comes on like this genre picture, when in fact it's a beautiful portrait of the life of a place and time, the day-to-day existence. ... It's how I like to make films, within a limited space.

Director's distinct style is all over new film

Budapest or bust

Is it the same with people? Why use Bill Murray as often as you do?

Nobody ever asks why, but it's a reasonable question: I work with certain people over and over and because I am a fan. I always want to introduce new people to my films, but I like a reunion. Bill Murray, even more so. Before I knew him, I was an exponentially greater fan of his than anyone I knew. He had a life before me, of course. Now we have this working history.

Now that you've been making movies for about 20 years, I wonder if the way you approach what you include in a frame, it's a cataloging instinct to capture a thing, a person—a way of saying, these things existed in this place at this time.

Yeah, you're describing something I can relate to. If you told me you had this stuff to show me and it was inventoried in a certain way, I would definitely want to see that. Did you see that short film on "Saturday Night Live" last fall? [A spot-on satire of what a Wes Anderson slasher flick might look like.] They had a character list every object in front of him. Hopefully, I have not become a parody. But there are certain tics.

Hoops on tap

Where to watch and toast your favorite team during March Madness

By Kate Bernot and Samantha Nelson | REDEYE

Even if you haven't donated to your college's alumni fund lately—how do they even get your cellphone number?—you're likely the school's No. 1 fan when it's NCAA tourney time. Out come the sweatshirts, hats and trash talk ... and the quest to find fellow fans. For those in search of a bar affiliated with their alma maters, RedEye presents its annual NCAA college bar guide at redeyechicago.com/collegebars. There, you'll find affiliated bars plus their drink and food specials, as well as unaffiliated bars that run specials during the tournament. Below is just an excerpt of the 100-plus bars and 43 schools covered by our online guide.

Ludwig earns some 'Vikings' cred

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

✉ @showpatrol

Lothbrok, the show's main character played by Travis Fimmel. In the history-based series airing at 9 p.m. Thursdays, Ragnar is a visionary Viking leader who leads his people to faraway lands, but grows to view his sons as rivals.

That father-son rivalry, Ludwig said, turned playful off camera between the actors.

Alexander Ludwig knew he'd have to bring the muscle playing a young warrior in History's "Vikings," but he didn't expect to use it when the cameras stopped rolling.

Ludwig joined the cast in Season 2 as Bjorn Ironside, the now teenage son of Ragnar

"Just before a take we'd start wrestling and see who could take the other," he said of Fimmel, whom he called "a dingo." "At the start he was able to take me. I think by the end of the shoot we were pretty even."

Ludwig got close with many cast members on the shoot in Ireland. But it wasn't all fun and games, he said. As an actor who never thought he'd do TV, he considers "Vikings" to be one of the smartest career choices he's made to date. The 21-year-old has starred in "The Hunger Games" and the recent "Lone Survivor," among other films.

Ludwig said he's "grown so much as an actor" by getting to play a character over several episodes. His character sees tremendous growth this season as well. As Season 2 began, Bjorn moved away with his mother, Lagertha (Katheryn Winnick), who left Ragnar after marital indiscretions. By the second episode, four years have passed and when they meet again later in the season, the reunion won't be all roses. Bjorn's strength and eventual fighting prowess will inspire jealousy in his father.

"Ragnar was really the first pioneer of exploring other lands, but then Bjorn Ironside really took it to another level," Ludwig said. "The story's just begun because what Ragnar's son did was incredible."

In coming episodes, viewers will get to see Ludwig in action as Bjorn learns to fight from his dad and his warrior uncle, Rollo (Clive Standen), as well as battle rival clans. Ludwig enjoyed training for the fight scenes, but said it was different from the fighting he's done in other productions.

"It's very much a schoolyard brawl. You can practice as much as you want but as soon as the director says 'action,' you're fighting 30 other guys," he said. "It's a [bleep] show and you're just trying not to get hit."

Go to redeyechicago.com to read how Mark Wahlberg initiated Ludwig on the set of "Lone Survivor."

NU grad returns to play 'Mind Games'

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

✉ cwagner@tribune.com
@showpatrol

"Mind Games" star Jaime Ray Newman has no doubt that the psychological manipulation techniques used on the ABC series really work. She has first-hand experience.

"I met my husband in Israel; he's Israeli and it took four years of the Jedi mind tricks to convince him to move to the States," the Northwestern grad said of her husband, writer-director Guy Nattiv. "So he would say that I'm an expert at it, and that it took zero research to play this part."

On the Chicago-filmed drama airing at 9 p.m. Tuesdays, Newman plays Sam Gordon, an ex-con who tricks her way into a job at Edwards and Associates, a business based on the belief that people's decisions are influenced in ways they're not aware. In other words, employees use con artistry, psychological suggestion and a bit of science to aid clients who have nowhere else to turn.

Sam met the company's co-owner, fellow ex-con Ross Edwards (Christian Slater), at court-ordered group therapy sessions. She uses her own powers of influence to con Ross and his brother, Clark (Steve Zahn), into giving her a job.

"I think that Sam is sort of the female version of Ross ... and I think that she knows how to manipulate people better than almost anybody," Newman said. "It's how she's earned every dollar she's ever made in her life."

Although she believes acting could be considered "the art of manipulation," Newman didn't con her way into a successful career since graduating from Northwestern. After working in film, on stage and TV with "Eureka," "Eastwick," "Grimm" and many more productions, Newman returned to Chicago in the fall to film "Mind Games."

She had the chance to revisit some of her old stomping grounds, including the Green Mill Jazz Club, where she performed with her own jazz quartet and the funk band Sweet Sweet Candy while in school. Filming also took her back to a familiar Evanston corner.

"We were shooting one block from Ridge and Davis, which is where I lived when I was at Northwestern," she said. "So that was just magnificent. That was a really, really cool experience."

'Walking Dead' has it all for Lauren Cohan

ABOUT LAST NIGHT

Luis Gomez

 » lgomez@tribune.com
 » @TribLuis

Following her recurring roles on NBC's "Chuck" and The CW's "Supernatural" and "The Vampire Diaries," Lauren Cohan decided to leave Los Angeles and move back to England. Cohan—who was born in Philadelphia and raised in New Jersey before moving to England at 13—missed her family, the culture and the theater scene.

Her return trip lasted a whole week.

Cohan booked the role of farm girl Maggie Greene on the second season of AMC's "The Walking Dead" and moved to Georgia, where the series is filmed. Now in its fourth season, the show about a zombie apocalypse is one of the biggest ratings draws on TV, and Cohan is one of its biggest stars. She is set to appear at the Walker Stalker convention Saturday and Sunday at the Donald E. Stephens Convention Center in Rosemont.

"Lo and behold, I ended up working on 'Walking Dead' with two amazing British actors, Andy [Lincoln] and David [Morrissey]," said Cohan over the phone from Los Angeles. "It's a dream job and I got some of the [British] culture I'd been craving."

There have also been film opportunities, but Cohan said she has had to turn them down due to her busy "Walking Dead" schedule. "I did have screen tests for things," Cohan said. "But it's tricky. Right now I'm all about 'Walking Dead.' It's a great problem to have."

Walker Stalker Con takes place Friday through Sunday and will include appearances by "Walking Dead" cast members Steven Yeun, Emily Kinney and Chad L. Coleman and former cast members who have been killed off on the show.

Because so many co-stars have been killed off, Cohan has learned to accept that there are certain things that are out of her control and made peace with the fact her time on the show can end at any point.

"I'm in a place where I feel OK with whatever happens," Cohan said. "But don't let me be misunderstood, I'm happy and don't want to leave."

Chance breaks SXSW showcase

Chicago Tribune

AUSTIN, Texas It didn't go exactly as planned, but in a way Chance the Rapper's truncated set in the early hours of Wednesday morning affirmed the message that a legion of Chicago heavy hitters tried to impart at the South by Southwest Interactive Festival.

After only 18 minutes at the club Red7, Chance was booted off the stage by the Austin fire marshal because the club was deemed over capacity. A police officer explained that there were at least 350 people in the club, which has official capacity of 300.

It was a disappointment for the fans, who chanted their displeasure before dispersing, but if nothing else it demonstrated that Chicago's got game; there was no hotter ticket Tuesday than Chance's performance.

The 20-year-old rapper, born Chancellor Bennett, is one of the rising stars in hip-hop after releasing an acclaimed 2013 mixtape, "Acid Rap." He was in the midst of putting a punctuation point on a six-hour evening of Chicago music with his musical collaborator, keyboardist Peter Cottontale. The evening also included winning sets by teenage singer-songwriter Bonzie, veteran rockers the Autumn Defense and the production team of the Hood Internet, which staged an all-star jam of Chicago hip-hop with Hologram Kizzie (aka Psalm One), Show You Suck and Prob Cause.

The showcase helped amplify the message that was delivered to Austin and to the thousands of entrepreneurs and technology-sector executives at the conference by Mayor Emanuel, Cultural Affairs Commissioner Michelle Boone and a team of business executives and government officials. They presented Chicago's cultural diversity as an incentive for new businesses to move to the city and create jobs.

At the Chicago showcase, several key members of the city's music scene were willing to play along with Emanuel's strategy.

"It's long overdue," said musician and CIMM Fest co-founder Josh Chicoine. "Yeah, he's going after these tech companies, but the idea is to try to build platforms so that [creative] people can do good [stuff]. That's what I try to do."

Hideout co-owner Tim Tuten said Emanuel "understands the economic value of the music scene. We haven't had that from a mayor before."

Lindsay Lohan
made a sex list—
we checked it twice

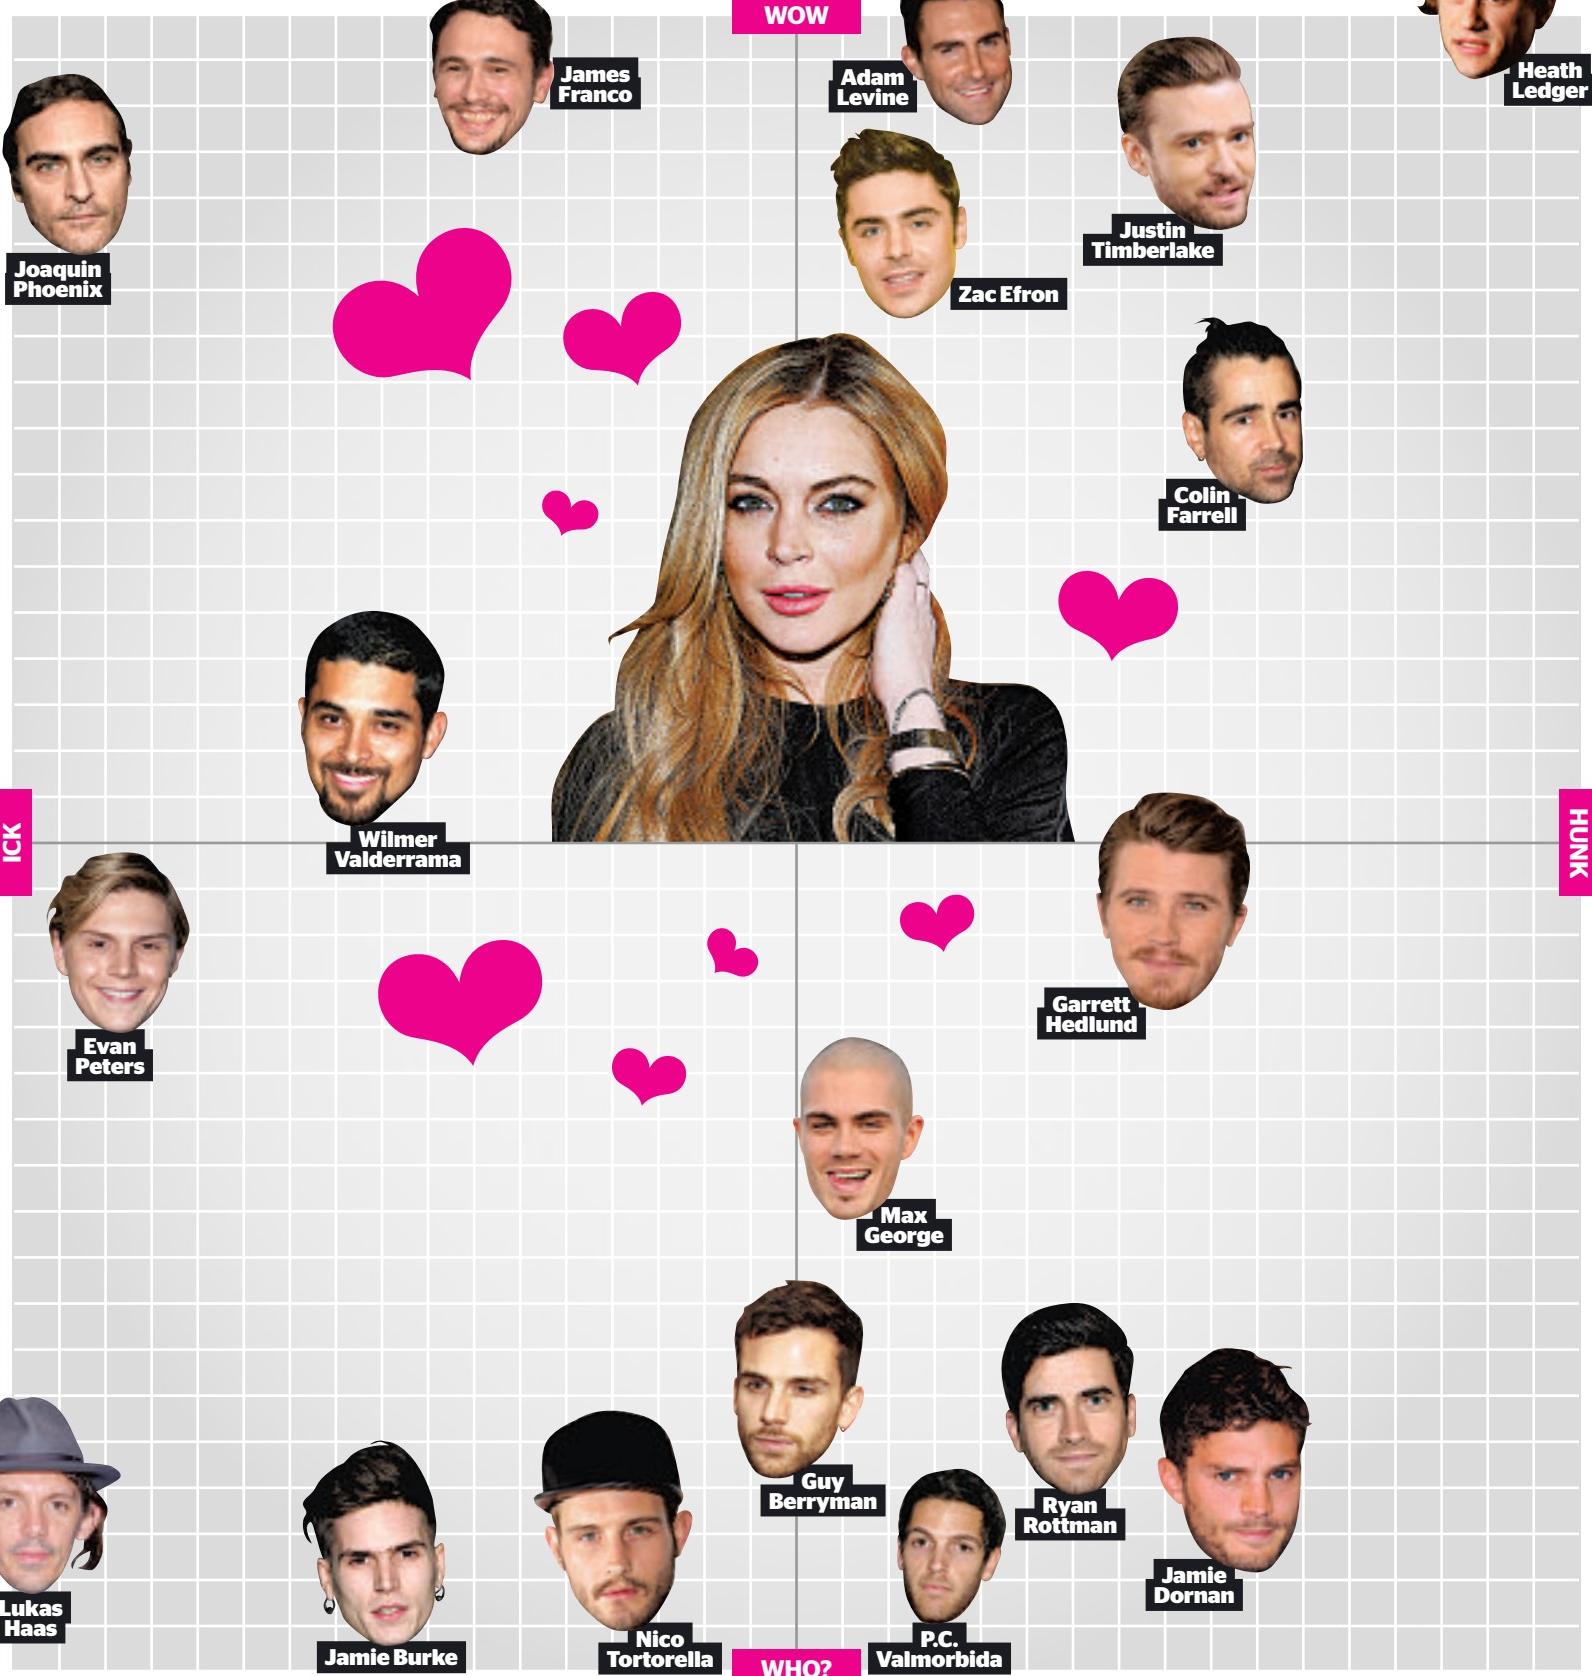

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Oh, how we hope this is true. In Touch magazine claims to have obtained a copy of a list Lindsay Lohan wrote of 36* famous men she's slept with. (Read that sentence twice if you'd like; it just gets more delicious.) According to a HIGHLY scientific investigation by New York magazine's The Cut, LiLo's handwriting on the inventory, supposedly written in January at the Beverly Hills Hotel, totally checks out. So we're just gonna go with it.

The revelation leaves us with so, so many thoughts, most of which aren't really appropriate to share in print. Instead, allow us to chart them on a super-classy approval matrix.

**Unfortunately, InTouch chose to blur many of the names on the list, so we could rate only 18 of them.*

Sure, Shailene Woodley is starring in an adaptation of a fantasy-thriller novel series, but don't think for one second that makes her a fan of those vampire books.

"Twilight," I'm sorry, is about a very unhealthy, toxic relationship. She falls in love with this guy and the second he leaves her, her life is over and she's going to kill herself!" the "Divergent" star told Teen Vogue. Yes, we definitely see your point.

She's no Twi-hard

Way to ruin childhood

Today's EDM stars probably watched "The Lion King" at least 100 times when they were kids. But that doesn't mean this is a good idea: thr.com reports that artists such as Avicii, Mat Zo, BT, U.N.K.L.E. and The Japanese Popstars will release remixed versions of Disney classics such as "The Circle of Life" and "You've Got a Friend in Me" on April 22 through Walt Disney Records. Because the world definitely needed a House version of Dumbo's "Baby Mine."

Stay tuned

We've got some good news and some bad news—we'll let you decide which is which. CBS announced Wednesday that "The Big Bang Theory" has been renewed for three more seasons, taking it through the 2016-17 season. And Entertainment Weekly reports that Season 4 of "Key and Peele" has been expanded to 22 episodes on Comedy Central, as well as adding an animated spinoff of the pair's Critiquer's Corner sketch.

That's how many movies in the "Smurfs" franchise will exist once a new edition comes out Aug. 14, 2015. thr.com reported the horrifying news, along with a sequel to vampire-lodging flick "Hotel Transylvania," set for a Sept. 15, 2015, release.

Glitter: The musical

Neil Patrick Harris is officially our favorite cover model of the month. The "How I Met Your Mother" star appears on the front of Out magazine to promote his starring role in the Broadway revival of "Hedwig and the Angry Inch," and says the part brought out some insecurities.

"I've lived my whole life being attracted by masculinity—it's why I like guys. I'm not a super effete person, and I have to turn into that, and in doing so it brings up a lot of homophobic insecurities within myself," he said. We can't wait to see what he does with the role.

“ Maybe I could take the 2-3 a.m. slot on NBC?"

—Tina Fey, to E! News, on being uncertain whether she'd be good at hosting a talk show. "I'm sorta shy, so I feel like I'd be too shy to talk to people every single day all day," she added.

“I'M NOT EVEN SURE IF I HAVE A SOCK DRAWER!"

—Grand Budapest Hotel director Wes Anderson, to Vulture, on whether his movies resemble aspects of his real life. To read all about "Grand Budapest Hotel," see Pages 20-22.
